When precision is key

Just as a single air bubble in a syringe can have fatal consequences, a single error in a medical translation can have disastrous results. With spantrans, there's no need to worry—your translation is in good hands.

Our translations are reviewed by multiple professional translators in order to ensure the utmost quality—because when precision is key, one set of eyes is not enough.

Daniel Greuel is the founder and lead translator at spantrans. With a B.I.S. in Translation and Interpreting (Health Care specialization), Sociology, and Global Studies from the University of Minnesota-Twin Cities, and as a candidate for an M.A. in Foreign Languages and Literature (Spanish to English Translation) from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Daniel knows what it takes to produce medical translations that are clear, precise, and natural, conveying the meaning of the original text using the appropriate medical terminology and suitable style. He is a native speaker of U.S. English with experience living abroad in Central America and Catalonia (Spain), and over two years of experience translating medical and social science documents.
